

We worked with Robert Costanza, director of the University's Institute for Ecological Economics, to program and design an innovative building to house his program. The first semester ran as an ecological design seminar, during which we researched precedent, toured the new Chesapeake Bay Foundation Headquarters and held design charrettes. The second semester was run as a graduate-level Design Studio, using the program and guidelines from the seminar.

